Lessons from Tanzania on how to start from scratch and why it is so important. “Ushi kwa mutumwa kwa ajili ya kama kununua majani.” - “The person who has no experience of [jumping over] a wall, should not jump over it.” Starting a new business is no easy task, and a risk that can make many people shiver at the thought of doing. You might have to build a brand, create an offer, develop your social media presence, find a marketing plan, hire people for your team, sit with your accountant, pick up the phone. This is not an easy task by any means, but how do you start one? How do you even do it? Well, in an interview with Matt Jenkins from Bain, he said that even if you are starting from scratch you should not take a 100% risk. You should not aim for a complete failure and be afraid to fail. You should work hard, and you should be proud of your work and work product as it will be your first impression to the world. Your team should support you and you should always know what you are doing. If you have never done it before you should start from others who have done it before. They should be your mentors. Never do it alone. This is the best way to make sure you do not regret your decision when you look back on it. Start from a plan Well, planning is key. Your business should not be a rollercoaster of changes and innovation. You should have a structure and this will make you happy. Even if you have the best idea for a social media strategy, you should not just dive in straightaway. You should start with a plan. You should know how much time you have, whether it is monthly, weekly or daily. You should know how much money you will need to set up and what are the ways that will help you to reach your goal. You should know what you want to achieve, and then you should work towards that. Matt Jenkins also added that once you have the project plan, that is the best time to measure whether your social media efforts are working or not. How do you start? Most people start small. Many entrepreneurs try to do something for themselves when they are not qualified, but sometimes they end up doing things that they are not qualified to do at all. They start [Pharmacological profile of the compound drug furosemide in comparison with chlorothiazide and hydrochlorothiazide]. The effect of furosemide on acid metabolism in healthy male volunteers was investigated. When given orally, furosemide was as effective as chlorothiazide. Following intravenous injection furosemide reduced significantly the plasma levels of chlorides and compared well with the results obtained by chlorothiazide. Furosemide was the only diuretic agent which did not increase the excretion of beta-sitosterol and lanosterol and the urinary excretion of hippuric acid. The influence of furosemide on the urinary excretion of prostaglandins, arachidonic acid metabolites, sulfate metabolites, cation excretion and the effect on the blood electrolytes was examined as well as its effect on plasma renin activity. In contrast to chlorothiazide, furosemide did not lower blood pressure. Thus, the effect of furosemide on acid metabolism appears to be superior to that of chlorothiazide. A pharmacological advantage of furosemide is its lack of a positive inotropic effect and therefore its lack of cross-tolerance with the cardiac glycosides. 1.5-fold and 2.0-fold, respectively. This was the first attempt to evaluate the influence of biomechanical factors on the wear resistance of the resin composite. The findings of this in vitro study indicate that to achieve the desired clinical longevity of resin restorations, optimum cavity and core dimensions are mandatory.

CONCLUSION {#sec1-5} =====

Under the conditions of this study, the following conclusions can be drawn The wear resistance of the resin composite decreased with increasing the shear stress exerted on it as recorded in the mean surface roughness of RMGIC-group. This finding is in accordance with the clinical situation, where the patients display a relatively high masticatory activity, which may lead to a significant force placed on the crowns of the patients. The mean surface roughness of the tooth-bonding agent group was the least, which can be due to the heat curing of the adhesive and the minimizing shearing force that it exerts when the tooth is occluded. MARC for the Z100 group was 7.1 to 8.2 μm , while the result for the Z100 system demonstrated that it had 0.5 μm
